We saw how a very simple, 144 square feet space can change the life of an entire family. We saw the progress. We saw how families started in a very small space and turned that one space into a gold mine. And their life was completely different. Because they have something that belongs to them. They have that sense of belonging.

GUIDE to ATLANTA'S BUFORD HIGHWAY IN WHOSE HEARTS IS A HIGHWAY
If I have to live in the United States,
if I have to live in Atlanta, Georgia (because we already moved all our stuff to America)
maybe I can live here, because there’s some Korean people live there and we can get together.

All the memories I have is just me and her on the train. I’m pretty sure we got lost, but she wouldn’t have told me. Here I am a child, how can I help her. Eventually she learned how to ride and she – just any moment we would get the stroller, put me in and off to downtown. Can you imagine crossing Buford Highway with a stroller and then just making our way to Marta.

No matter what, where you’re from, what your background was, everyone spoke the language of just hard work and hustle. That’s why it’s so diverse here [on Buford Highway], because you don’t care about what language people speak or how they look, because you speak the same language of hustle.

I never imagined that the interview would have such an effect on me personally. Speaking about feelings that I had kept mostly to myself since childhood has helped me finally feel more comfortable with who I am and the life that I lived. It’s helped me to find my voice.
